Which of the following most closely describes the drug policy alternative which you would most like to see implemented for some or all of the currently illegal drugs?

1 = "Legalization" -- either free-market or with various degrees of regulation (for example, like alcohol and/or tobacco)

2 = "Decriminalization and/or Medicalization" -- i.e., removing criminal penalties for using, possessing and/or obtaining drugs (with or without maintaining civil fines); perhaps (but not necessarily) giving addicts the choice to obtain their drugs from licensed medical professionals; perhaps moderate-to-large reductions in prison sentences for distributors; perhaps focus much (or all) of budget on education and treatment, instead of law enforcement and punishment

3 = "Kinder, gentler Prohibition" -- i.e., continuing to arrest people for drug possession, but sentencing them to coerced treatment instead of prison; reducing (but not eliminating) prison sentences for distributors; replacing much (but not all) of the current law enforcement budget with funding for education and treatment

4 = "Status quo" -- e.g., maintaining prison sentences for users and dealers; perhaps some additional money spent on education and/or treatment, but otherwise keeping most money in enforcement; perhaps a few slight-to-moderate penalty reductions; not sure / don't know

Special Circumstances: If you feel comfortable sharing, please provide more information regarding matters such as: Have you ever been arrested for a drug offense? Are you a recovering addict? A current user? A relative of an addict or someone who was ever arrested? Etc. (Use more paper, if necessary.)
